

Yukon River Cruise

Cruise in the wake of the Rush of '98

In 1883 US Army Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka led a small expedition on a raft down the Yukon River 3,200 kilometers to the Bering Sea. His most memorable moments were spent near what is today Whitehorse. Here the crew was forced to pole their primitive "corvette" through narrow Miles Canyon and over infamous White Horse Rapids. Fifteen years later, tens of thousands of gold rush stampeders, including the famous novelist Jack London, would take all manner of hastily built craft through the same obstacle course.

Now you too can heed "the call of the wild" and retrace their passage, experiencing all of the beauty with none of the fear. The rapids have been covered by gentle Schwatka Lake, and Miles Canyon can be safely navigated by our comfortable cruise boat the MV Schwatka. Enjoy the best cup of coffee in the Pacific Northwest as your guide takes you back into the days when legends were created on these turquoise waters.
